THREE KILLED WHEN ASSASSINS ATTACK GANGSTER ENEMIES

Vincent Coll Gang Targets Of Murder Squad

NEW YORK, Feb. 2.—New York's deadliest and most ruthless underworld execution in which an assassin squad mowed down a group of Vincent Coll adherents as they made merry at a party reached out a deathly hand for its fourth victim today.

With one woman, mother of three children, and two men left dead on the scene of the carnage in the dining room of the Bronx House, and another woman and two men injured, doctors at a hospital said that Louis Basile, 40, one of those shot, was in a dying condition.

There were nine adults and four or five children in the house where the party was held.

Just as the gathering prepared to sit down to table late last night, four gunmen believed to be allied with the "Dutch" Schultz gang, rivals of Coll, invaded the room.

The blazed away at the terror-stricken victims with automatics. Before the victims could defend themselves of escape three of them, including a woman, fell dead before the withering fire. Before the invaders had emptied their guns, three others were wounded.

The killers, their deadly minute's work over, fled downstairs and raced off in an automobile waiting near the house.

Police Commissioner Mulrooney, who took charge of the investigation immediately after the slaying, thought it probable that the gunmen were out to "get" Coll, for whose death his sworn foe, Schultz, was said to have posted $50,000.

The dead were:

Timely Torzello, 32.

Florio Basile, 40.

Patsy Del Greco, Coll's chief lieutenant.

The wounded:

Mrs. Lena Vineguerra, 40, wounded in the arm.

Louis Basile, 40, wounded near heart, probably will die.

Joseph Parrone, 19, wounded in arm.

Two children were in the room while the massacre was in progress, but were not hurt. Two other children were in an adjoining room.

Parrone's father, somewhat deaf, was asleep in his apartment in the rear of the same house during the shooting but was not awakened by it.

Florio Basile was reputed to be Coll's bodyguard. He was believed by police to be a brother of Michael Basile, arrested recently with Coll on charges of conspiring to commit a crime.

Coll himself was cleared after a trial a few weeks ago of the charge of participating in the Harlem baby massacre last summer.

Four men, who were present as the room in which festivities were planned was turned into a shambles by the gunmen and who escaped without injury, were taken into custody by police and questioned.

Authorities believed the fatal descent grew out of the sworn enmity between Coll and Schultz. The feud already has cost more than a dozen lives. Once allies, Coll and Schultz split to become rivals in the beer racket.

EXPLODES MYTH

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 2.—Another old-time bed-time story was blasted today. Edward Sinclair Thomas, curator of natural history of the Ohio State Museum, declares that February 2 isn't ground-hog day; that any sensible groundhog is sleeping soundly and won't be out of his underground burrow until February 7.

Well, if he would have come out of his burrow today, he wouldn't have seen his shadow—so what's the difference.

Next thing, they'll be telling us there's no Santa Claus.

ARMS CONFERENCE DELAYED

DELEGATES PONDER SHANGHAI CRISIS; ATTACK DENOUNCED

Nations United In Protest To Japan; China Pleased

GENEVA, Feb. 2.—At 3 o'clock this afternoon it appeared probable that the disarmament conference which had been postponed because of the Shanghai situation, would be opened at 4:30 p. m. (10:30 a. m. Eastern Standard Time).

When the conference was postponed the League of Nations council was convened in extraordinary session at 2:40 to consider the crisis.

Andre Tardieu, French war minister, was in the chair when the council met, but immediately surrendered the gavel to J. H. Thomas, British dominions secretary, because he said Great Britain had asked that the session be convoked.

Thomas addressed the council with a vigorous denunciation of the attack upon Shanghai.

"It is impossible to permit the present situation in the Far East to continue," he said. "Everyday fresh incidents of the utmost gravity increase the seriousness of the conflict."

"Shanghai is the scene of continual machine gunning, artillery and airplane bombardment."

"It is war in everything but name."

"The covenant of the League of Nations, the Kellogg pact and the nine power Pacific treaty are menaced."

"In this situation the British government has taken certain steps and I am glad to say the United States has given us her wholehearted cooperation."

"The council's efforts to end the conflict by peaceful means has failed and therefore Great Britain and the United States have decided to make further efforts."

Tardieu announced that France had sent a note to its diplomatic and consular agents at Tokyo and Nanking, instructing them to cooperate with the British and American authorities in all necessary steps for the protection of foreign citizens.

Dino Grandi, Italian foreign minister, declared:

"The Italian government has taken the same steps as France and desires to express the hope that the situation will soon be cleaned up."

Dr. Weizsacker, speaking for Germany, declared the Reich government would cooperate fully in any measures the other powers decided were necessary.

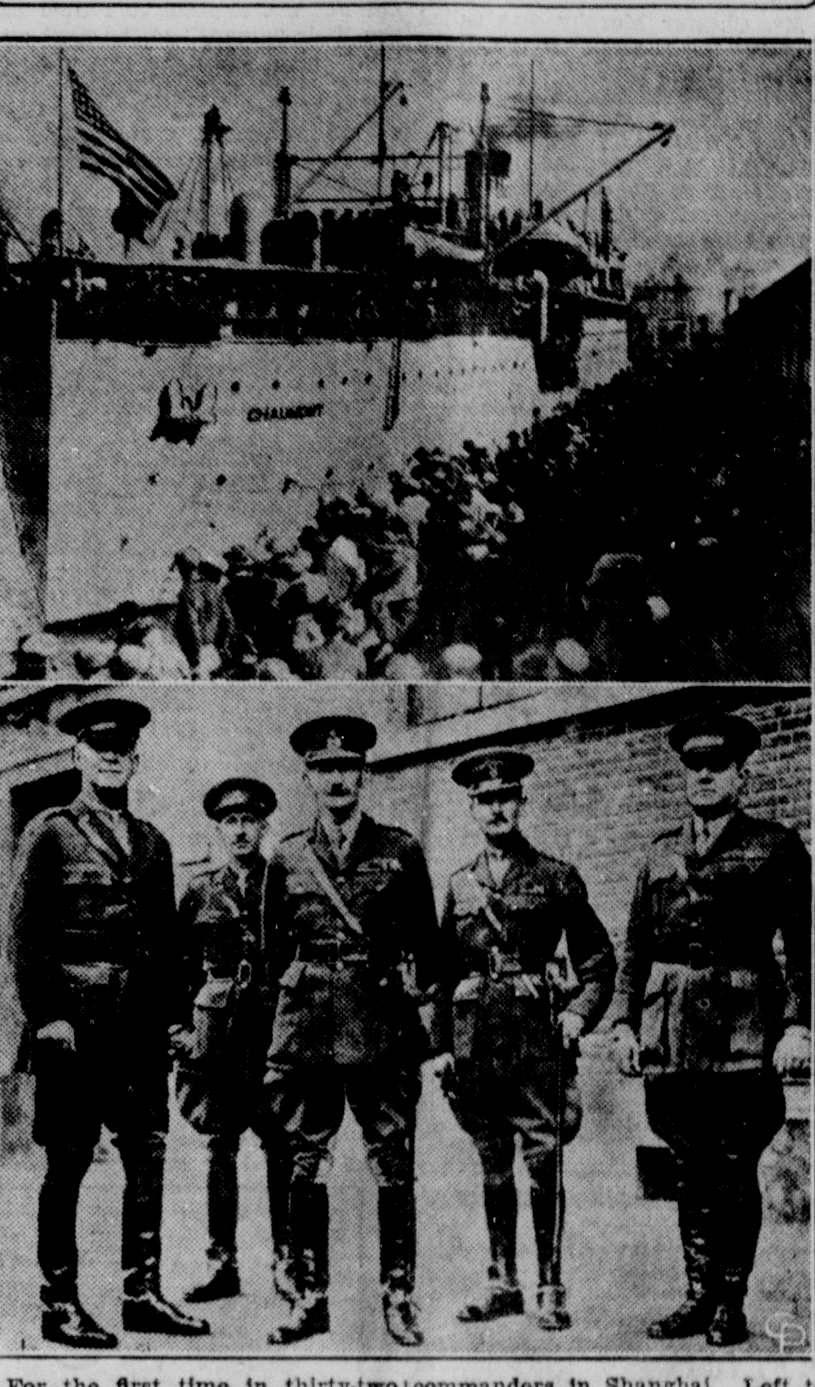

Dr. W. W. Yen, Chinese delegate, made a short address, thanking the other council members.

"I am exceedingly happy at these expressions of opinion and desire for energetic action," he said. "I shall inform my government at once."

Naotake Sato, chief Japanese delegate, read a declaration that Japan had been forced to act at Shanghai to protect her nationals.

"I am happy to hear the British statement," he said, "since we ourselves requested Great Britain and the United States to consider the grave situation at Shanghai."

WASHINGTON HOPES DANGER TO FOREIGN SETTLEMENT PAST

Watches Situation In Case Evacuation Is Necessary

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—Tense expectancy gripped officials of the United States government as they watched press reports of developments of the "war front" in the Shanghai area.

The question of evacuating American civilians from Shanghai and other danger ports along the Chinese coast and up the Yangtze River thrust itself to the forefront while authorities were awaiting the arrival at Shanghai of additional reinforcements of American and British forces.

Generally, officials do not believe such move will be necessary. Although they are prepared to act they do not believe the Japanese, with the immense commercial financial stake they have invested in Shanghai will either evacuate all their civilian nationals or subject the city to a large scale bombardment.

They base their hopes for the safety of American and other foreign lives in the international settlement, for the present upon the fact that Japanese subjects have investments there totaling almost $100,000,000, American money.

It was admitted that the period pending the arrival of the strong force of American naval vessels and the 31st U. S. Army Infantry, as well as the additional British naval and military reinforcements, is one of nervous expectancy.

Their feeling, based upon hope, is that the crisis has passed; that it passed with the announcement by the United States and British governments that strong additional naval and military forces were being rushed to Shanghai. The situation is now largely what Japan proposes to do to pull herself out of the situation as a result of her lawless attempt at military occupation of Shanghai.

UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN SET PEACE CONDITIONS

Demand Aimed At Japan Principally; Want Troops Withdrawn; Prepare To Evacuate Americans; Desperate Battle Going On

(BULLETIN)

NANKING, Feb. 3. (Wednesday, 12:42 a. m.)—Nanking was quiet early today following a large exodus of citizens fleeing to Hankow. Spasmodic looting occurred when the exodus began but no serious disorders were reported.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—A joint demand by the United States and Great Britain was made today upon Japan and China for the cessation of all hostilities in the Shanghai area.

Announcement of the joint action of the two English-speaking nations was made by the state department, but the announcement significantly contained no reference to Japanese reaction to the proposal. In the absence of such a reference the inference was that the Japanese government "is studying" the proposal, and has made no commitment.

Although the representations were presented to both combatants, the request for cessation of the fighting obviously was pointed specifically at the Japanese, for they, as invaders, have been the aggressors and have reduced the native section of Shanghai to a shambles by artillery fire and aerial bombing.

The Anglo-American demand was based upon five specific requests. These were:

1—Cessation of all acts of violence on both sides forthwith on the following terms:

2—No further mobilization or preparation whatever for further hostilities between the two nations.

3—Withdrawal of both Japanese and Chinese combatants from all points of mutual contact in the Shanghai area.

4—Protection of the international settlement by the establishment of neutral zones to divide the combatants; these zones to be policed by neutrals; the arrangements to be set up by the consular authorities.

5—Upon acceptance of these conditions prompt advances to be made in negotiations to settle all outstanding controversies between the two nations in the spirit of the Pact of Paris (Kellogg anti-war treaty) and the resolution of the League of Nations of Dec. 9, without prior demand or reservation and with the aid of neutral observers or participants.

TOKYO, Feb. 22. — The United States government has instructed W. Cameron Forbes, its ambassador here, to make arrangements to quarter Shanghai's American community in Tokyo in the event evacuation from Shanghai becomes necessary. It was learned by International News Service tonight.

Japan's hopes that France would refrain from joining in the diplomatic demarche were dashed when the French ambassador joined in the protests during the last twenty-four hours. Increased resentment against the other powers for leaving Japan in an isolated position in the Shanghai crisis was noticeable.

The stock market was closed this afternoon after sharp declines had occurred during the morning session because of the situation at Shanghai.

It was rumored here that American oil firms had decided upon a form of economic boycott, holding up shipments of petroleum to Japan.

Japanese residents of Peking have asked Tokyo to send reinforcements because of the situation there.

AUTO REVIVAL HELPS RETURN OF BUSINESS

Improvement Seen In Review Of Federal Reserve Bank

CLEVELAND, Feb. 2.—Revival of activities in the automobile industry has brought an encouraging improvement in business sentiment in Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Kentucky.

This was the gist of the monthly business review of the Federal Reserve Bank of Cleveland, covering financial, industrial and agricultural conditions in the fourth federal reserve district, released here today.

Operations expanded only slightly from the very low levels of November and December, but "the fact that production has stopped declining, if only temporarily, is somewhat encouraging," the review disclosed.

"The resumption of operations has been marred in this district because practically all the improvement is directly attributable to the automobile industry which has been absorbed in new model production," it was stated.

"A great quantity of material is required to complete the new cars necessary to stock dealers throughout the country and much of it is produced in this territory. Local steel companies have been operating at higher than average rates. Tool and die makers have increased operations. Hardware, auto parts, accessory, plate glass, body paint manufacturers all reported an increase in orders in December or the first part of January."

The upward trend also caused a slight improvement in employment and payrolls, the business review said.

Aside from expansions due to the automobile industry, shoe factories reported a "much greater than seasonal increase" and clothing manufacturers also expanded operations slightly.

FIVE PERSONS LOST ON BAHAMA - BOUND PLANE

Coast Guard Vessels Start Search; Army Bomber Seeking Lost Airliner In West, Also Missing; Had Crew Of Two

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 2.—United States coast guard vessels combed the South Atlantic today, searching for some trace of an airliner which vanished with five persons aboard.

The plane, one of the fleet of Bimini Airways Company ships, disappeared last night after starting for the Bahamas on a regular scheduled flight. It carried four passengers and the pilot, Val Chick.

Fears were felt that the ship might have plunged into the ocean during the night.

A search of the waters was begun after company officials here were advised that the ship failed to reach its destination, Bimini, Bahamas.

On the bomber were Lieuts. Edward D. Hoffman and W. A. Cooke, Jr. It left Glendale at 8 a. m. intending to search over the snowy Tehachapis en route to Crissy Field, San Francisco.

FUTURE OF COMPANY L APPEARS ASSURED WITH FORTY SIGNED

Recruits Enlist In Guard Unit Here; Need More

With forty recruits enlisted, the future of Company L, 147th Infantry, Ohio National Guard in Xenia, seems assured.

With this group enrolled Colonel H. Rudolph, Cincinnati, regimental commander and officer of the company believe there will be little difficulty experienced in completing the reorganization of the company under a plan by which the personnel standard was raised.

This announcement came Tuesday, after a recruiting meeting Monday night, during which a large number of candidates were approved and signed enlistment papers. Colonel Rudolph, much encouraged by the renewed interest in the organization, believes that the company can be held intact long enough to recruit to the full peace time strength of sixty-three before federal inspection.

Major J. P. Murphy and Sergeant Parsons, regular army instructors attached to regimental headquarters at Cincinnati, Captain Baker, company commander at Springfield and other visiting officers attended the meeting Monday night. Recruits signed so far are:

Collins, S. Lorimer, Lawrence J. Hibbert, J. Warren Mason, Charles L. Brickett, Howard E. Thompson, Harris E. Lane, Wendell R. McCoy, Lewis U. Glenn, Melvin Filson, Robert W. Lorimer, John G. Bald.

CONFESSES TO FOUR MURDERS

Hammer Slaying Suspect Held

CHICAGO, Feb. 2.—Four brutal hammer slayings were dramatically solved today when Paul Harrison, 27-year-old jobless mechanic, confessed to the killings, police announced.

Trapped in his hotel room, Harrison, believed to be Chicago's long-sought "phantom club maniac," delivered his confession at detective headquarters after an all-night grilling.

Declaring he had no motive for any of the gruesome murders, the unemployed mechanic named as his victims, Dr. James Shaffer, 64-year-old dentist, Miss Norma Newby, 36, Eugene Davis, 21-year-old garage watchman, and Charles Pagel, 27.

RETURN MAYOR WEBB TO JOB FROM WHICH HE WAS ONCE OUSTED

Successor Is Ousted When Court Holds Votes Illegal

JACKSON, O., Feb. 2.—"In again—out again" Thomas Webb was again as mayor of Jackson today. Judge Benner Jones, who only five weeks ago removed Webb, a Democrat, from office on charges of misconduct in connection with giving liquor to a minor, returned him to the position late yesterday.

The ruling was handed down after Judge Jones found that forty irregular votes were cast in last November's election for Theodore Waters, Republican, who defeated Webb, seeking re-election, by six votes.

The case was taken to court when Webb challenged the legality of Waters' election.

Shortly before Webb's administration expired, his removal was sought in a petition signed by 300 citizens who charged malfeasance, misfeasance and misconduct in office. Judge Jones convicted Webb and removed him from office. Two days later Waters was inaugurated.

Now, after one month's service as mayor, Waters today found himself removed from office and Webb again occupying the mayor's chair. According to Judge Jones' ruling, Webb was elected at the November elections by a majority of at least two and possibly twenty-four votes.

Fleet Commander Of Invaders Says Ships Fired On Capital To Answer Chinese Attack; Orders Flyers To Avoid Firing On Neutrals

SHANGHAI, Feb. 2.—"No Japanese marines have landed in Nanking and I have no intention of landing them there."

In these words the admiral of the Japanese fleet here, Kichiro Shiozawa, definitely denied at noon today that he had landed marines at the Chinese capital, temporarily abandoned, which was bombarded for over two hours yesterday from Japanese ships.

The admiral received me in his quarters aboard a Japanese gunboat moored in the Whangpoo River at Boochow Creek, in front of the Japanese consulate.

"Why did the Japanese cruiser from middle river open fire upon Nanking on a sleeping town?" he was asked.

"Our fire was not unprovoked and Nanking was not asleep," Shiozawa replied smiling.

"That's the kind of misleading propaganda we have to deal with," he said. "The facts are that the Chinese military opened fire on our ships at eleven o'clock (11:00 p. m. Monday).

"It was dark and nobody could see who fired the first shot, and that's why the Chinese blame us. Three shells were fired from the Lion Fort, and at the same time the Chinese regular army opened up machine guns on a small detachment of our sailors guarding the dock of a warehouse of a Japanese shipping company."

"Our sailors responded and repulsed the attack, and at the same time two of our cruisers trained guns on the Lion Fort and returned the Chinese fire. The cruiser Susukuma was on a sleeping town?" he was asked.

BISHOP CANNON'S SUIT IS DISMISSED

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—Bishop James Cannon Jr., militant Methodist churchman and prohibitionist, lost a $500,000 libel suit today.

Justice Byron Gordon, sitting in district supreme court, dismissed the bishop's suit for a half million against Rep. George Holden Plinkham, Republican, of Massachusetts, for charges made against him some months ago in connection with his 1923 campaign expenses.

CHINA CENSORS NEWS

By International News Service

Early evacuation of American residents from Shanghai loomed today with reports from Tokyo that United States Ambassador W. Cameron Forbes had been instructed to quarter Shanghai's American community in the Japanese capital if evacuation became necessary.

A desperate battle between Chinese and Japanese forces continued at Shanghai, no gain for either side being reported six hours after the Japanese launched a new offensive bringing naval guns into play in Shanghai for the first time.

China clamped down a rigid censorship on outgoing cables over the Great Northern Route.

The League of Nations council met in Geneva, where J. H. Thomas, British dominions minister, vigorously denounced the attack upon Shanghai and described the situation there as "war in everything but name."

Despite the gathering war clouds, the general disarmament conference under league auspices was scheduled to open at 4:30 p. m.

In an exclusive interview with Floyd Gibbons, International News Service correspondent at Shanghai, Japanese Admiral Shiozawa vigorously denied that any Japanese marines had been landed at Nanking, former capital of the Chinese republic. This report, widely published yesterday, was not carried by International News Service from any of its correspondents in China.

SHANGHAI, Feb. 2. (8:35 p. m.) —Japanese forces in Shanghai unleashed their naval guns in a new offensive against the Chinese in the Chapel district today at 8:30 p. m., six hours after the engagement began, the Chinese lines were still holding their own.

Japanese military commanders claimed victory, but in spite of this claim, neither side has made any apparent gain at the time this dispatch was filed.

For the first time since the Japanese invasion of Shanghai got underway, warships were brought into play in an effort to wipe out the Chinese forces, now reported to number more than 50,000 men.

Only five naval shells were fired, however, the warship bombardment ceasing abruptly.

The main engagement took place a safe distance from the international settlement boundary, although the Japanese were firing on the Chinese lines.

They base their hopes for the safety of American and other foreign lives in the international settlement, for the present upon the fact that Japanese subjects have investments there totaling almost $100,000,000, American money.

It was admitted that the period pending the arrival of the strong force of American naval vessels and the 31st U. S. Army Infantry, as well as the additional British naval and military reinforcements, is one of nervous expectancy.

Their feeling, based upon hope, is that the crisis has passed; that it passed with the announcement by the United States and British governments that strong additional naval and military forces were being rushed to Shanghai. The question is now largely what Japan proposes to do to pull herself out of the situation as a result of her lawless attempt at military occupation of Shanghai.

FUTURE OF COMPANY L APPEARS ASSURED WITH FORTY SIGNED

Recruits Enlist In Guard Unit Here; Need More

With forty recruits enlisted, the future of Company L, 147th Infantry, Ohio National Guard in Xenia, seems assured.

With this group enrolled Colonel H. Rudolph, Cincinnati, regimental commander and officers of the company believe there will be little difficulty experienced in completing the reorganization of the company under a plan by which the personnel standard was raised.

This announcement came Tuesday, after a recruiting meeting Monday night, during which a large number of candidates were approved and signed enlistment papers. Colonel Rudolph, much encouraged by the renewed interest in the organization, believes that the company can be held intact long enough to recruit to the full peace time strength of sixty-three before federal inspection.

Major J. P. Murphy and Sergeant Parsons, regular army instructors attached to regimental headquarters at Cincinnati, Captain Baker, company commander at Springfield and other visiting officers attended the meeting Monday night. Recruits signed so far are:

Collins S. Lorimer, Lawrence J. Hibbert, J. Warren Mason, Charles B. Brickett, Howard E. Thompson, Harris E. Lane, Wendell R. McCoy, Lewis J. Glenn, Melvin Filson, Robert W. Lorimer, John G. Bald.

UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN SET PEACE CONDITIONS

Demand Aimed At Japan Principally; Want Troops Withdrawn; Prepare To Evacuate Americans; Desperate Battle Going On

(BULLETIN)

NANKING, Feb. 3. (Wednesday, 12:42 a. m.)—Nanking was quiet early today following a large exodus of citizens fleeing to Hankow. Spasmodic looting occurred when the exodus began but no serious disorders were reported.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—A joint demand by the United States and Great Britain was made today upon Japan and China for the cessation of all hostilities in the Shanghai area.

Announcement of the joint action of the two English-speaking nations was made by the state department, but the announcement significantly contained no reference to Japanese reaction to the proposal. In the absence of such a reference the inference was that the Japanese government "is studying" the proposal, and has made no commitment.

Although the representations were presented to both combatants, the request for cessation of the fighting obviously was pointed specifically at the Japanese, for they, as invaders, have been the aggressors and have reduced the native section of Shanghai to a shambles by artillery fire and aerial bombing.

The Anglo-American demand was based upon five specific requests. These were:

1.—Cessation of all acts of violence on both sides forthwith on the following terms:

2.—No further mobilization or preparation whatever for further hostilities between the two nations.

3.—Withdrawal of both Japanese and Chinese combatants from all points of mutual contact in the Shanghai area.

4.—Protection of the international settlement by the establishment of neutral zones to divide the combatants; these zones to be policed by neutrals; the arrangements to be set up by the consular authorities.

5.—Upon acceptance of these conditions prompt advances to be made in negotiations to settle all outstanding controversies between the two nations in the spirit of the Pact of Paris (Kellogg anti-war treaty) and the resolution of the League of Nations of Dec. 9, without prior demand or reservation and with the aid of neutral observers or participants.

TOKYO, Feb. 22.—The United States government has instructed W. Cameron Forbes, its ambassador here, to make arrangements to quarter Shanghai's American community in Tokyo in the event evacuation from Shanghai becomes necessary, it was learned by International News Service tonight.

Japan's hopes that France would refrain from joining in the diplomatic demarche were dashed when the French ambassador joined in the protests during the last twenty-four hours. Increased resentment against the other powers for leaving Japan in an isolated position in the Shanghai crisis was noticeable.

The stock market was closed this afternoon after sharp declines had occurred during the morning session because of the situation at Shanghai.

It was rumored here that American oil firms had decided upon a form of economic boycott, holding up shipments of petroleum to Japan.

Japanese residents of Peking have asked Tokyo to send reinforcements because of the situation there.

CHINA CENSORS NEWS

By International News Service

Early evacuation of American residents from Shanghai loomed today with reports from Tokyo that United States Ambassador W. Cameron Forbes had been instructed to quarter Shanghai's American community in the Japanese capital if evacuation became necessary.

A desperate battle between Chinese and Japanese forces continued at Shanghai, no gain for either side being reported six hours after the Japanese launched a new offensive bringing naval guns into play in Shanghai for the first time.

China clamped down a rigid censorship on outgoing cables over the Great Northern Route.

The League of Nations council met in Geneva, where J. H. Thomas, British dominions minister, vigorously denounced the attack upon Shanghai and described the situation there as "war in everything but name."

Despite the gathering war clouds, the general disarmament conference under league auspices was scheduled to open at 4:30 p. m.

In an exclusive interview with Floyd Gibbons, International News Service correspondent at Shanghai, Japanese Admiral Shiozawa vigorously denied that any Japanese marines had been landed at Nanking, former capital of the Chinese republic. This report, widely published yesterday, was not carried by International News Service from any of its correspondents in China.

SHANGHAI, Feb. 2. (7 p. m.)—Japanese marine headquarters tonight announced a complete victory over the Chinese. The Chinese, the Nipponese headquarters stated, are retreating in great disorder as the result of today's Japanese offensive.

SHANGHAI, Feb. 2.—American Consul-General Edwin S. Cunningham received a protest from Colonel Hooker, commander of the United States Marines, against the activities of Japanese marines within the lines defended by the Americans, he told International News Service today.

SUNDAY COLDEST OF WINTER; MUCH RAIN DURING LAST MONTH

The coldest day of the "winter" was last Sunday, when the low temperature of 13 degrees above zero was recorded, according to an official announcement by Weatherman Ernest L. Harner. The year's new "low" was five degrees below the official minimum temperature for Saturday.

The warmest day of January was the fourteenth, when the mercury rose to 69 degrees, according to Weatherman Harner's monthly report.

Rainfall during January totaled 6.21 inches. The greatest precipitation during any period of twenty-four hours was measured at 1.16 inches January 15. The month was marked by twelve clear, sixteen cloudy and three partly cloudy days.

The report makes no mention of any snow, although a flaky material that bore a close resemblance to snow upon close examination was found to be small particles of this almost forgotten substance, fell a short time Saturday morning. Presumably the snow discontinued so quickly there was nothing much to measure.

UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN SET PEACE CONDITIONS

though minor fighting occurred close to the boundary line. Barges whistled over the city as the Chinese laid down a barrage against the Japanese school at the mouth of Szechuan Road, being used as Japanese marine barracks. The Chinese attempted to demolish the place with stokes mortar shells, but failed to record a decisive hit.

A foreign observer visiting the Chinese lines reported indications the Chinese were preparing to evacuate a part of their positions. He reported heavy casualties among the Chinese.

The observer said that the Chinese troops seemed utterly without organization. During the Japanese offensive, he saw teapots placed atop machine-guns and food spread out on top of the sandbag emplacements. Some detachments of the Chinese army calmly proceeded with their meals as patriots further along the line hurled shells at the Japanese from trench mortars.

There was no scientific system of defense whatever, he reported. An official Japanese communique stated that four Japanese field pieces fired thirty shots each on the Chinese positions in Chapel, the Chinese using a number of howitzers in reply.

Firing occurred all along the line. One Japanese sailor was killed and two wounded, the communique said.

hima hurled eight six-inch shells into the Chinese fort, and the cruiser Tenryu fired two more.

"Our fire was directed at the fort and not at the town. Chinese guns were silenced after three shots and we stopped firing after ten shots. One of our sailors was seriously wounded.

"My report, just received by navy wireless, does not state whether the wounded sailor was on the cruiser or among the guard on shore.

"The Chinese attack on us was entirely unprovoked. We have filed protest with the Chinese government."

"How was the protest filed?" I asked.

"Very strange," Shiozawa replied, smiling again, "Very strange."

Dependable Fuel Since 1915

You see this is not a regular war, but still it is very dangerous in Nanking, so it is not possible for our consul or diplomats to call on the Chinese government. We must find other means.

So this morning the senior officer of the cruiser Sushima was to make an official visit to the commander of the American destroyer Simpson, advise him of the full account of the night clash, and present to him an official protest by the Japanese consul with the request that he present it to the American consul ashore at Nanking, and then ask the American consul to deliver the Japanese protest to the Chinese government in Nanking—if there is any Chinese government remaining in Nanking.

"Yes, it is all very strange."

"Very strange, indeed," I agreed. The admiral continued:

"It makes my position awkward here in Shanghai, where everything I have done has been in accordance with plans of defense laid out by the international commission defense committee."

"Our lines at present are all within the zone agreed upon in the original defense plans, but the danger is increasing, because the Chinese are concentrating field guns in the railroad yards opposite us and are installing strong entrenchments in the ruins of the Commercial Press building and the old railroad station."

I remarked here that I was unable to understand why the Japanese flyers bombed the station in the crowded civilian quarter, when the railroad could have been cut by bombing the tracks beyond the town, accomplishing the same military object.

Admiral Shiozawa explained as follows:

"Outside the town the tracks are very narrow—being only a single track. It is very difficult to drop a bomb just exactly on the track. Bombs fall on both sides of the track, but do not directly hit it.

"We will do better next time. I have given strict orders to flyers to limit their targets to military objects and men. I had hoped to send my planes up over the city today, not for bombing—just for a reconnaissance."

"But this fog is very bad, and it would make visibility very poor. Maybe after awhile the sun will come out."

Well, sir, boys and girls, that interview occurred within the last hour, and since I left the admiral's quarters, by golly, the sun has come out, and just a few minutes ago one of the admiral's seaplane bombers sailed right over this hotel in which I am banging out this broadcast.

Everybody else in Shanghai is worried, but I have the admiral's above without bombs and are there just to look and see, so of course I am not scared—that is, not much!

though minor fighting occurred close to the boundary line.

Bullets whistled over the city as the Chinese laid down a barrage against the Japanese school at the mouth of Szechuan Road, being used as Japanese marine barracks. The Chinese attempted to demolish the place with stokes mortar shells, but failed to record a decisive hit.

A foreign observer visiting the Chinese lines reported indications the Chinese were preparing to evacuate a part of their positions. He reported heavy casualties among the Chinese.

The observer said that the Chinese troops seemed utterly without organization. During the Japanese offensive, he saw teapots placed atop machineguns and food spread out on top of the sandbag emplacements. Some detachments of the Chinese army calmly proceeded with their meals as compatriots further along the line hurled shells at the Japanese from trench mortars.

There was no scientific system of defense whatever, he reported. An official Japanese communiqué stated that four Japanese field pieces fired thirty shots each on the Chinese positions in Chapel the Chinese using a number of howitzers in reply.

Firing occurred all along the line. One Japanese sailor was killed and two wounded, the communiqué said.

ADMIRAL DENIES JAPS SENT FORCE

himself buried eight six-inch shells into the Chinese fort, and the cruiser Tenryu fired two more.

"Our fire was directed at the fort and not at the town. Chinese guns were silenced after three shots and we stopped firing after ten shots. One of our sailors was seriously wounded."

"My report, just received by navy wireless, does not state whether the wounded sailor was on the cruiser or among the guard on shore."

"The Chinese attack on us was entirely unprovoked. We have filed protest with the Chinese government."

"How was the protest filed?" I asked.

"Very strange," Shiozawa replied, smiling again, "Very strange."

You see this is not a regular war, but still it is very dangerous in Nanking, so it is not possible for our consul or diplomats to call on the Chinese government. We must find other means.

So this morning the senior officer of the cruiser Sushima was to make an official visit to the commander of the American destroyer Simpson, advise him of the full account of the night clash, and present to him an official protest by the Japanese consul with the request that he present it to the American consul ashore at Nanking, and then ask the American consul to deliver the Japanese protest to the Chinese government in Nanking—if there is any Chinese government remaining in Nanking.

"Yes, it is all very strange."

"Very strange, indeed," I agreed.

"It makes my position awkward here in Shanghai, where everything I have done has been in accordance with plans of defense laid out by the international concession defense committee."

"Our lines at present all are within the zone agreed upon in the original defense plans, but the danger is increasing, because the Chinese are concentrating field guns in the railroad yards opposite us and are installing strong entrenchments in the ruins of the Commercial Press building and the old railroad station."

I remarked here that I was unable to understand why the Japanese flyers bombed the station in the crowded civilian quarter, when the railroad could have been cut by bombing the tracks beyond the town, accomplishing the same military object.

Admiral Shiozawa explained as follows:

"Outside the town the tracks are very narrow—being only a single track. It is very difficult to drop a bomb just exactly on the track. Bombs fall on both sides of the track, but not directly on it.

"We will do better next time. I have given strict orders to flyers to limit their targets to military objects and men. I had hoped to send my planes up over the city today, not for bombing—just for a reconnaissance."

"But this fog is very bad, and it would make visibility very poor. Maybe after awhile the sun will come out."

Well, sir, boys and girls, that interview occurred within the last hour, and since I left the admiral's quarters, by golly, the sun has come out, and just a few minutes ago one of the admiral's seaplane bombers sailed right over this hotel in which I am banging out this broadcast.

Everybody else in Shanghai is worried, but I have the admiral's above without bombs and are there just to look and see, so of course I am not scared—that is, not much!

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

O give thanks to the Lord of lords: for his mercy endureth for ever.—Psalms cxxxvi, 3.

THE FUTURE NEW YORK

While the Tammany administration of New York City is living from day to day upon what it can borrow, there is at work a group of far-sighted men and women looking into the years to come and laying the foundation for building a city that may provide for the needs of coming generations. This group is known as the Regional Plan of New York and its Environs, and a few days ago it published the second and final volume of work describing the tremendous project upon which its engineers and committee have been at work for ten years.

This plan has given to New York the first comprehensive survey of a large city has ever had of what its needs would be in coming generations and how it might expect to meet them most effectively. It covers the needs of New York at work, at home and at play. It has regard for sunlight, for fresh air, for transportation. Such projects as those for elevated sidewalks and sunken speedways represent merely the more spectacular but less important phases of a gigantic vision. The attempt has been made not only to foresee needs, but to show how growth may be directed with the least waste of effort and human happiness.

While the studies made thus far have had some effect upon developments which have been undertaken, the vast scope of the plan has hardly been appreciated, nor its significance grasped, either by the bulk of the citizens or by the political elements of the city. To understand what the engineers envisaged requires constructive social imagination or the urge of immediate necessity.

It is unlikely that under Tammany control the groundwork can soon be laid for a sound growth of New York City, but if men and women of public spirit and high intelligence can be placed in office, then the city may see an unfoldment that will make it one of the most beautiful and most lovely cities ever built. A beautiful and comfortable city, however, can grow only from a renewed desire on the part of its citizens for a wise and unselfish government.

HISTORY REPEATS

The adage that "it is an ill wind that blows no good" is well illustrated in the effect on business of the current slump.

Ten years ago, in the depression year of 1921, the gross sales volume of all corporations reporting for income tax purposes, was eighty-seven billion dollars. The net profits for the year were $494,000,000.

During 1922, the first year of recovery, these same corporations reported sales of ninety-four billion dollars and profits of $4,464,000,000. While sales increased only 8 per cent, profits jumped 800 per cent.

Seems unbelievable, but the explanation is simple. During 1921, operating costs were pared down to fit a depression volume of business. When sales increased, much of the added revenue was clear profit.

The same situation is now repeating itself. During the past year, corporations instituted strict measures of economy, so that the costs at the end of the year were far lower than at the beginning.

If only a mild increase in business from 1931 levels occurs, the net income should rise sharply, as it did ten years ago.

Thus a business slump accomplishes good by forcing economy, purging industry and commerce of extravagant waste and loose business methods and restoring sanity to business operations.

This condition is also reflected in market speculation and in fact in many other fields of business, so that its effects will be felt over a long period of years and the recurrence of another depression becomes more remote.

The shrewd merchant, who buys wisely, advertises his merchandise properly to insure the most frequent stock turn-over and guards his expenses carefully, is the merchant who pays the biggest income tax at the end of the year.

Gatzeteers

Another old expression has gone into the discard, the January thaw.

Come back, Will Rogers, Washington needs someone with a sense of humor.

It's a good thing radio listeners can't see what is going on before the microphone.

A movie actress says she would rather be smart than fancy, but she is probably quite sure she is both.

The next time you hear a Californian bragging, just remind him of the snow storm, and watch him melt away.

Where are last year's birds' nest, you ask. Answer, in the usual place and likely full of eggs for hatching.

Crooning is going out of the radio and probably there never would have been any if the crooners could have been seen.

If, as estimated, it costs the government $840 a day to print the Congressional Record of embalmed talk, why not cut the talk and economize?

No Man Entitled To Complain

By GILBERT BETTMAN
Attorney General of State of Ohio
(Gilbert Bettman was born in Cincinnati, O., Oct. 31, 1881. He is a graduate of Harvard, and has received numerous honorary degrees. He was admitted to the Ohio bar in 1907, and has practiced in Cincinnati. He became vice mayor of Cincinnati in 1921. Bettman was elected attorney general of Ohio in 1928, and was re-elected in 1930, when the state went Democratic, although he is a Republican.)

The fundamentals of government have not changed throughout the ages. They consist of honest and capable administration consonant with the will of the majority. Good government is achieved in direct proportion to the number of capable and honest citizens devoted to the ideal of public service.

Government gives to the people only what the people give to the government. We accomplish a government "of the people, by the people and for the people," only to the extent that our energy, spirit and purpose are invested in public activities. No man is entitled to complain of government unless, according to his ability and opportunities, he has done his utmost to help paddle the ship of state.

Our democracy is not perfect. Furthermore, it does not function as well as it should. It has its faults. The remedy, however, lies not in abolishing democracy, but rather in improving it.

The evil lies in the disparagement of democracy. Let us not give up democracy, but rather make it work! If there be ill in our democracy, the cure is not less democracy but more democracy—that is, a greater interest by all the people in the government and a greater willingness on the part of some of the people to serve their government.

America will achieve its age of Pericles when public activity is regarded not as politics in a narrow sense but as government in every real sense, when government is viewed as the superprofession, the superprofession of all Americans.

MY NEW YORK

By JAMES ASWELL

NEW YORK. — Mr. Lee Posner is a short, plump, mustachioed gentleman, of great amiability, who represents more night clubs—"cafes", as he calls them—than anybody else. Most of Lee's clients are in Harlem, a section he has promoted with such fidelity and ingenuity that he has acquired a middle name of "Harlemania."

That, incidentally, was the title of the monster benefit show Lee got together recently, with great success. He has an office in which he frequently sleeps, in the Knights of Columbus Hotel. He likes his work; likes the music and the entertainment and the tinsel of the night places. He wouldn't be happy in any other atmosphere, and he fell into his present work entirely by accident.

He had had a disagreement with his boss, the editor of one of the foreign language newspapers where Lee was want-ad manager. Temporarily out of a job, he sallied forth with three companions to console himself "in a couple of cafes." Early in the morning he fell into conversation with the lady manageress of Jimmy Kelly's place in the village.

"There," joked one of his friends, pointing to Lee, "is the world's best night-club press-agent!"

He was promptly signed up by Jimmy Kelly's, before he knew what it was all about. Since then his string of accounts has grown to such proportions that he cannot tell you offhand how many he represents. The Cotton Club, Connie's Inn, Small's Paradise, Tillie's Kitchen—in fact, practically the whole night life of Harlem—depend upon Lee for their relations with the press.

"It's great!" he exclaims. "Lots of music, fun, eats, and so on. And I get paid for it!"

HOP, SKIP AND JUMP

The newest whimsy is playing contract bridge to music. There is a record out called "Sing a Song of Contract," specially designed for the pastime. Now some of the smarter drug store lunch counters are serving "brunch," around 11 a. m., combining the best features of breakfast and lunch.

Better-grade restaurants will insist on presenting new pairs of hose to lady guests who rip their stockings on chairs in the place. This expense has led two or three of the swankiest dining rooms to install aluminum chairs, which are tear-proof.

Dishes for visiting gourmets: the chicken rumba at the Tropics Restaurant, in 50th Street; the onion soup at the Ship Grill place; the veal cutlet parmesan, at Biscardi's, in 22nd Street near Lexington Avenue, and the strawberry shortcake at Longchamps.

Those patent hand-warmers, small metal rectangles which resemble cigarette cases, have been denied the success predicted for them by extraordinarily warm weather this year. The pigeons of Battery Park have been evicted, as menaces to health and comfort, and copper wire netting has been placed under the eaves of the Barge Office, where they have been nesting for 19 years.

The amount of money required to teach a pupil in the elementary grades has been estimated at $37.12 for one year.

The first successful evening schools in this country were established about the middle of the nineteenth century, although an attempt without permanent results was made in New York in 1834.

WE CAN'T HELP BEING INTERESTED

DELEGATE FROM HAWAII TELLS WHAT HE BELIEVES TO CAUSE CONDITIONS

WASHINGTON—Honolulu seemed to me the quietest city of its size (about 100,000 then) that I ever saw, when I was there. To be sure, that was a long time ago—just before the war, in the day of Governor Walter F. Frear.

The peace and orderliness of it were almost oppressive. True, the big oriental areas looked a trifle spooky after night-fall, and I took pains to ask reliable folk whether they were safe to venture into. Everyone declared them to be perfectly so, and I explored extensively, without a sign of misadventure.

"For one thing," a bartender (from the "states"), whose acquaintance I made, informed me, "there's virtually no drunkenness. It makes you sick for week to go on a bust here. It's the climate."

At that particular time there was considerable talk in the U. S. A. about the "Japanese peril." In fact, I had stopped off on my way to the Far East to get what newspaper men call a "story" on the subject. I had taken it for granted that the Hawaiian whites would be in a high fever of anxiety, considering the Japanese, which was ready to revolt at the drop of the mikado's hat, according to popular belief on the Pacific coast mainland.

To my astonishment, I found no state of excitement whatever—not only tension, but apparently no "race question," either.

I asked Governor Frear what the explanation was. "Why," answered the governor, "more than two-thirds of these Japanese are American-born. The remaining one-third, as well as the forebears of the younger generation, left Japan because they were dissatisfied with conditions there. It is likely that they would lend a hand to establish in Hawaii just what they or their ancestors came to Hawaii to escape? Obviously not. We have no more loyal citizens, and would-be citizens—the old folk, who are ineligible for naturalization."

But the apparent orderliness of the territorial people? Was I mistaken? Or, in the light of recent unfortunate occurrences, has there been a deterioration?

"Your conclusions," rejoined Delegate Victor S. Kaloaloha Houston, the territory's spokesman in congress, "were substantially correct when you drew them. Since then there has been an alarming growth and spread of lawlessness throughout Hawaii, precisely as on the mainland—and due to the same causes."

Morally is Honolulu as black a spot on the map as it has been painted?

"The heavy predominance of men in Hawaii's population," replies Delegate Houston, "is undeniable."

"The presence, too, of a considerable contingent of young men,

Film actors and actresses agree that they are members of one of the least interesting professions in existence. They cast, almost every one, longing glances at what they think are more glamorous careers. In an informal poll conducted the other day at one of the big studios, the following results were chalked up:

Dick Arlen thinks newspaper men have the most fun. Claudette Colbert goes for school teachers. Nancy Carroll—doctors. Lilyan Tashman—steamship captains. Pauline Frederick—the stage. William Boyd—air mail pilots.

My own vote, if I had one, would be polled for the manner in which I've earned my soup since school days, for the simple reason that I'd probably starve in any other line.

A Brave Man
Condemned to Die.

He had a "Brooding Room"

There was a man who had been condemned to die. The doctors had told him so and he knew they were telling him the truth. He believed them. His family knew that he had received his death sentence. All his friends knew it. So, too, he made no secret of it. Soon, too soon, he would leave this earth, this home of his, his books, his pipe, his affectionate dogs—all that was dear to him, and doubly dear because he must leave so soon.

Life was precious to that man. He had always loved it. He was an able man and he had gotten what he wanted out of existence. He had used his powers. He had developed them. He was, as the world sees men, a success.

He had been a happy man, a vigorous man, a man well adjusted to his fellows and to life. It was a sad wrench to be leaving this life so soon, while he was still strong, still able to enjoy what was good and what was beautiful.

He hated to go. But he told no one how much he hated it. Looking at him, hearing him laugh, you would have thought him a man of iron nerves, with no sensibility to him at all. But one day a friend came to visit this man condemned to die. He found him in the sunshine, in the heart of his family. They walked together on a green lawn, they talked casually of common things as men do in the presence of death. (I know about that because more than once in the war I talked to young men who did not know how soon or terribly they were about to die.)

And this man took his visitor through the house and up the highest stairway. And they climbed aside a certain plan to have a certain amount to assure the payment of a certain amount when it is due. For instance, if one were to borrow $1000 for a period of ten years, the loan would be amortized by depositing $100 each year for ten years.

Expenditures made out of personal allowances should not be entered in the family record. These should be regarded as the private affairs of the individual making them and recorded in his own book. In the case of children, of course, guidance will be needed.

How One Man Recovered

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

Whatever became of the victims of jake paralysis?

Their plight stirred up the country about a year ago. They were the ones who sampled some Jamaica ginger because other alcoholic stimulation was scarce. But unfortunately there was a large amount of Jamaica ginger on the market that had not been made from ginger. The manufacturer had used a chemical which tasted and smelled like ginger, but which was cheaper. The chemical was tri-ortho-cresyl phosphate. It had a specific effect on the nerves, causing degeneration.

The consequence was that even after using a very little of this ginger product the victim had a paralysis, particularly of the legs. The form of the paralysis was what is called "multiple neuritis." The victims had a steppage gait, so named because they lifted their feet very high when they walked, because otherwise the foot, being paralyzed, would hang down and trip them.

Most cases of multiple neuritis get well in the course of time. The nerves regenerate. But the report was that no case of jake paralysis made any improvement.

I was very glad, therefore, to find in my mail a letter from one of them, announcing that he had recovered and explaining the treatment he used in doing so. It is reproduced here for any who may be interested:

"I was one of the sufferers of so-called 'Jakeleg', or, as I prefer to call it, 'Zingaberitis', and I am entirely free of the terrible disease. It is one, reflexes normal, and no apparent deformity. I attribute my entire recovery to two things, namely, systematic daily prescribed exercise (holding to bed if necessary) rising up on the toes 15 times morning and night, and the mechanical act of putting the extensor muscles at rest for 12 hours by sleeping at night with the feet in the full extended position. I accomplished this by putting my feet flat on the foot of the bed; in iron beds a pillow may be used. The extensors are the muscles, as you know, affected, and it is surprising what this rest accomplishes as the tendency is to let the feet stay in the flexed state.

"I have four friends, who have come to me, cured almost as well as I with these simple rules plus an iron, quinine and strychnine tonic and proper diet. It is marvelous how quickly results begin and how different mentally they become."

QUESTIONS FROM READERS

R. D.: "I need help in controlling my appetite. I am very prone to over-eating and eating at the wrong times. I work in a chain grocery and its hours are long and sometimes irregular. I would like a list of books that give accurate and complete caloric values to foods."

Answer: Locke's "Food Values" published by Appleton, gives complete tables of foods. The difficulty about the tendency to over-eating is one that confronts all doctors who attempt to treat patients by diet. One can tell a patient what to do but there is no way of telling whether he is going to do it or not.

Editor's Note: Six pamphlets by Dr. Clendening can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed, stamped envelope, to Dr. Logan Clendening, in care of this paper or Central Press Association, 1435 East Twelfth street, Cleveland, O. The pamphlets are: "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reducing and Gaining," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

Girl Breaks Engagement

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

If two young people love each other enough to become engaged and contemplate marriage, shouldn't they have a great deal of faith in each other? And shouldn't they be big and broad-minded about things? If they are going to be auspicious and unblemished during the engagement, they cannot expect much happiness and harmony after the wedding bells have pealed, can they?

"DEAR MISS LEE: I have been engaged to a boy two years older than myself for over a year, and a few weeks ago he took a girl to a dance and it was not until today that I found out about it. I have plenty of proof that he did take her to the dance, but when I asked him about it he denied it, so I don't know what to do.

"I gave him back his ring and he begged me to keep it, but if I can't trust him now I'll never be able to after we're married, I figure."

"Should I forgive him this time or let him stay away until he admits it, or accept dates from him now and then, or just what shall I do? If it were my fault that he broke the engagement I'd feel terrible, but as it is I don't feel so bad because I just despise deceitful people."

How good is your "proof" that the boy friend took this girl to the dance, D. K. E.? Did you see him with your own eyes? Did your nearest friend see him—and not only see him, but talk to him so that he or she knew, without any shadow of doubt, that it was your fiancé?

If not I certainly think you should believe him when he says he did not take the girl. He is not a liar, is he, this young man to whom you have pledged your troth? That is, he hasn't been in the habit of lying, has he?

People are easily mistaken in cases of identity. It's the easiest thing in the world to "think," almost to be sure, you saw a certain person somewhere, when as a matter of fact the person was not there at all. Suppose, as your boy friend denies that he took a girl to a dance, you give him the benefit of the doubt. You must have faith in the man you marry, as your surmise, and a suspicious person merely invites deceit.

But suppose you find out that he really did take her, what then, you ask? That depends on how much you love this young man. If you care very much for him, won't you encourage him to tell you about his activities and be broadminded about his actions? It might very well be that circumstances forced him to escort a girl to a party, and if he had been sure you would have taken it all right, he would have told you about it.

After all he said and done, you see, my dear, you have to decide this matter for yourself.

BASHFUL BABE: Talk about the same things you would if you were with a girl-school affair, sports, shows, etc.

ANXIOUS JANET: Ask your father to bring him to the house some time, Janet. If you can't do that, the only thing you can do is to be as friendly as possible when you see him. The rest is up to him.

LONELY ALICE: If the boy friend hasn't become discouraged by your refusing the date, of course patch up your troubles and be friends.

LIVING IN HOPES: I don't believe I would call the boy friend unless it should some time prove necessary. Let him do the calling. Why not take his friendship and admiration for granted, and as long as he treats you nicely try not to worry about things people say?

JUST SIXTEEN: The boys should call for the girls and escort them to the party. Don't you think you treated your boy friend pretty meanly, too? I do. Yes, speak to him when you meet.

One Day Liquid Diet

By GLADYS GLAD

It may be all right for bears and camels to store food on their bodies. But no woman needs to carry an extra supply of provisions around with her. It's conducive neither to beauty or comfort. Yet some women persist in making storage plants of their bodies.

It's a well-known fact that half the ill of mankind are due to over-eating or to incorrect eating. People get into the habit of consuming more food than their bodies require each day. They over-stoke their body-engines with too much fuel and half their organs become stiffed by the excess. Their bodies cannot cope with the rising flood of toxins that pollute their blood-streams. And they grow fat, or dull and drab-looking, or old and ugly.

If we all kept our bodies completely free from poisons we'd undoubtedly remain slender, youthful and radiant for years on end. Grandmothers would become as extinct as dodo birds. And this world would be a happier place all around. But the body demands co-operation if it is to be kept functioning in perfect rhythm.

Some time ago a girl of my acquaintance who had just recovered from an appendix operation, asked her physician what she could do to keep her weight normal. She complained that many women seemed to become fat after their appendices were removed. The physician advised her to go on a liquid diet one day each week. And that's just what I'm going to suggest as a corrective for over-fed systems.

Pick out one day each week on which you consume nothing except liquids. Begin with a glass of warm, sugarless lemonade when you rise in the morning. Make your breakfast of orange juice. Consume during the day nothing but liquids such as plain tea or coffee, orange juice, grapefruit juice, lemonade and buttermilk. And be sure to consume eight to ten glasses of water.

If you tend to gain weight easily, this liquid day each week will do wonders to keep your weight down. And what is more important, it will help to correct your over-fed system, will assist in the removal of poisonous wastes from your body, and will cleanse your alimentary canal most effectively.

Hands
Mrs. T.: An effective remedy for perspiring hands can be made of two drams boracic acid, three drams salicylic acid, three ounces glycerine, and three ounces bay rum. Apply three times daily.

Hair
Teddy: If your face is round and full, you should wear a side part and keep the hair off your forehead. Also, you should bring it forward on your cheeks, and keep it flat over your ears.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

O give thanks to the Lord of lords: for his mercy endureth for ever.—Psalms CXXXVI, 3.

THE FUTURE NEW YORK

While the Tammany administration of New York City is living from day to day upon what it can borrow, there is at work a group of far-sighted men and women looking into the years to come and laying the foundation for building a city that may provide for the needs of coming generations. This group is known as the Regional Plan of New York and Its Environs, and a few days ago it published the second and final volume of work describing the tremendous project upon which its engineers and committee have been at work for ten years.

This plan has given to New York the first comprehensive survey a large city has ever had of what its needs would be in coming generations and how it might expect to meet them most effectively. It covers the needs of New York at work, at home and at play. It has regard for sunlight, for fresh air, for transportation. Such projects as those for elevated sidewalks and sunken speedways represent merely the more spectacular but less important phases of a gigantic vision. The attempt has been made not only to foresee needs, but to show how growth may be directed with the least waste of effort and human happiness.

While the studies made thus far have had some effect upon developments which have been undertaken, the vast scope of the plan has hardly been appreciated, nor its significance grasped, either by the bulk of the citizens or by the political elements of the city. To understand what the engineers envisaged requires constructive social imagination or the urge of immediate necessity.

It is unlikely that under Tammany control the groundwork can soon be laid for a sound growth of New York City, but if men and women of public spirit and high intelligence can be placed in office, then the city may see an unfolding that will make it one of the most beautiful and most lovely cities ever built. A beautiful and comfortable city, however, can grow only from a renewed desire on the part of its citizens for a wise and unselfish government.

HISTORY REPEATS

The adage that "it is an ill wind that blows no good" is well illustrated in the effect on business of the current slump.

Ten years ago, in the depression year of 1921, the gross sales volume of all corporations reporting for income tax purposes, was eighty-seven billion dollars. The net profits for the year were $494,000,000.

During 1922, the first year of recovery, these same corporations reported sales of ninety-four billion dollars and profits of $4,464,000,000. While sales increased only 8 per cent, profits jumped 800 per cent.

Seems unbelievable, but the explanation is simple. During 1921, operating costs were pared down to fit a depression volume of business. When sales increased, much of the added revenue was clear profit.

The same situation is now repeating itself. During the past year, corporations instituted strict measures of economy, so that the costs at the end of the year were far lower than at the beginning.

If only a mild increase in business from 1931 levels occurs, the net income should rise sharply, as it did ten years ago.

Thus a business slump accomplishes good by forcing economy, purging industry and commerce of extravagant waste and loose business methods and restoring sanity to business operations.

This condition is also reflected in market speculation and in fact in many other fields of business, so that its effects will be felt over a long period of years and the recurrence of another depression becomes more remote.

The shrewd merchant, who buys wisely, advertises his merchandise properly to insure the most frequent stock turn-overs and guards his expenses carefully, is the merchant who pays the biggest income tax at the end of the year.

Gatzeteers

Another old expression has gone into the discard, the January thaw.

Come back, Will Rogers, Washington needs someone with a sense of humor.

It's a good thing radio listeners can't see what is going on before the microphone.

A movie actress says she would rather be smart than fancy, but she is probably quite sure she is both.

The next time you hear a Californian bragging, just remind him of the snow storm, and watch him melt away.

Where are last year's birds' nest, you ask. Answer, in the usual place and likely full of eggs for hatching.

Crooning is going out of the radio and probably there never would have been any if the crooners could have been seen.

If, as estimated, it costs the government $840 a day to print the Congressional Record of embalmed talk, why not cut the talk and economize?

No Man Entitled To Complain

By GILBERT BETTMAN

Attorney General of State of Ohio (Gilbert Bettman was born in Cincinnati, O., Oct. 31, 1881. He is a graduate of Harvard, and has received numerous honorary degrees. He was admitted to the Ohio bar in 1907, and has practiced in Cincinnati. He became vice mayor of Cincinnati in 1921. Bettman was elected attorney general of Ohio in 1928, and was re-elected in 1930, when the state went Democratic, although he is a Republican.)

The fundamentals of government have not changed throughout the ages. They consist of honest and capable administration consonant with the will of the majority. Good government is achieved in direct proportion to the number of capable and honest citizens devoted to the ideal of public service.

Government gives to the people only what the people give to the government. We accomplish a government "of the people, by the people and for the people," only to the extent that our energy, spirit and purpose are invested in public activities. No man is entitled to complain of government unless, according to his ability and opportunities, he has done his utmost to help paddle the ship of state.

Our democracy is not perfect. Furthermore, it does not function as well as it should. It has its faults. The remedy, however, lies not in abolishing democracy, but rather in improving it.

The evil lies in the disparagement of democracy. Let us not give up democracy, but rather make it work! If there be in our democracy the cure is not less democracy but more democracy—that is, a greater interest by all the people in the government and a greater willingness on the part of some of the people to serve their government.

America will achieve its age of Pericles when public activity is regarded not as politics in a narrow sense but as government in every real sense, when government is viewed as the superbusiness, the superprofession of all Americans.

MY NEW YORK

By JAMES ASWELL

NEW YORK. — Mr. Lee Posner is a short, plump, mustachioed gentleman, of great amiability, who represents more night clubs—"cafes", as he calls them—than anybody else. Most of Lee's clients are in Harlem, a section he has promoted with such fidelity and ingenuity that he has acquired a middle name of "Harlemmania."

That, incidentally, was the title of the monster benefit show Lee got together recently, with great success. He has an office in which he frequently sleeps, in the Knights of Columbus Hotel. He likes his work; likes the music and the entertainment and the tinsel of the night places. He wouldn't be happy in any other atmosphere, and he fell into his present work entirely by accident.

He had had a disagreement with his boss, the editor of one of the foreign language newspapers where Lee was want-ad manager. Temporarily out of a job, he sallied forth with three companions to console himself "in a couple of cafes." Early in the morning he fell into conversation with the lady manageress of Jimmy Kelly's place in the village.

"There," joked one of his friends, pointing to Lee, "is the world's best night-club press-agent!"

He was promptly signed up by Jimmy Kelly's, before he knew what it was all about. Since then his string of accounts has grown to such proportions that he cannot tell you offhand how many he represents. The Cotton Club, Connie's Inn, Small's Paradise, Tiller's Kitchen—in fact, practically the whole night life of Harlem—depend upon Lee for their relations with the press.

"It's great!" he exclaims. "Lots of music, fun, eats, and so on. And I get paid for it!"

HOP, SKIP AND JUMP

The newest whimsy is playing contract bridge to music. . . There is a record out called "Sing a Song of Contract," specially designed for the pastime. . . Now some of the smarter drug store lunch counters are serving "brunch," around 11 a. m., combining the best features of breakfast and lunch.

Better-grade restaurants will insist on presenting new pairs of shoes to lady guests who rip their stockings on chairs in the place. . . This expense has led two or three of the swankiest dining rooms to install aluminum chairs, which are tear-proof.

Dishes for visiting gourmets: the chicken rumba at the Tropics Restaurant, in 50th Street; the onion soup at the Ship Grill places; the veal cutlet parmesan, at Biscardi's, in 22nd Street near Lexington Avenue, and the strawberry shortcake at Longchamps.

Those patent hand-warmers, small metal rectangles which resemble cigarette cases, have been denied the success predicted for them by extraordinarily warm weather this year. . . The pigeons of Battery Park have been evicted, as menaces to health and comfort, and copper wire netting has been placed under the eaves of the Barge Office, where they have been nesting for 19 years.

The amount of money required to teach a pupil in the elementary grades has been estimated at $37.12 for one year.

The first successful evening schools in this country were established about the middle of the nineteenth century, although an attempt without permanent results was made in New York in 1834.

WE CAN'T HELP BEING INTERESTED

DELEGATE FROM HAWAII TELLS WHAT HE BELIEVES TO CAUSE CONDITIONS

WASHINGTON—Honolulu seemed to me the quietest city of its size about 100,000 then. That I ever saw, when I was there. To be sure, that was a long time ago. It was before the war, in the day of Governor Walter F. Frear.

The peace and orderliness of it were almost oppressive.

True, the big oriental areas looked a trifle spooky after night-fall, and I took pains to ask reliable folk whether they were safe to venture into. Everyone declared them to be perfectly so, and I explored extensively, without a sign of misadventure.

"For one thing," a bartender (from the states), whose acquaintance I made, informed me, "there's virtually no drunkenness. It makes you sick for week to go on a bust here. It's the climate."

At that particular time there was considerable talk in the U. S. A. about the "Japanese peril." In fact, I had stopped off on my way to the Far East to get what news subject, I had taken it for granted that the Hawaiian whites would be in a high fever of anxiety, considering the territory's large Japanese population, which was ready to revolt at the drop of the mikado's hat, according to popular belief on the Pacific coast mainland.

To my astonishment, I found no state of excitement whatever—not only tension, but apparently no "race question," either.

I asked Governor Frear what the explanation was.

"Why," answered the governor, "more than two-thirds of these Japanese are American-born. The remaining one-third, as well as the forebears of the younger generation, left Japan because they were dissatisfied with conditions there. It is likely that they would lend a hand to establish in Hawaii just what they or their ancestors came to Hawaii to escape? Obviously not. We have no more loyal citizens, and would-be citizens—the old folk, who are ineligible for naturalization."

But the apparent orderliness of the territorial people? Was I mistaken? Or, in the light of recent unfortunate occurrences, has there been a deterioration?

"Your conclusions," rejoins Delegate Victor S. Kalanokala Houston, the territory's spokesman in congress, "were substantially correct when you drew them. Since then there has been an alarming growth and spread of lawlessness throughout Hawaii, precisely as on the mainland—and due to the same causes."

Morally is Honolulu as black a spot on the map as it has been painted?

"The heavy predominance of men in Hawaii's population," replies Delegate Houston, "is undeniable."

"The presence, too, of a considerable contingent of young men,

CHOICES

Film actors and actresses agree that they are members of one of the least interesting professions in existence. They cast, almost every day, long glances at what they think are more glamorous careers. In an informal poll conducted the other day at one of the big studios, the following results were chalked up:

Dick Arlen thinks newspaper men have the most fun. Claudette Colbert goes for school teachers. Nancy Carroll—doctors. Lilyan Tashman—steamship captains. Pauline Frederick—the stage. William Boyd—air mail pilots.

My own vote, if I had one, would be polled for the manner in which I've earned my soup since school days, for the simple reason that I'd probably starve in any other line.

ALL of US

A Brave Man

Condemned to Die.

He Had a "Brooding Room"

There was a man who had been condemned to die. The doctors had told him so and he knew they were telling him the truth. He believed them. His family knew that he had received his death sentence. All his friends knew it, too. He made no secret of it. Soon, too soon, he would leave this earth, this family, these laughing friends, this home of his, his books, his pipe, his affectionate dogs—all that was dear to him, and doubly dear because he must leave so soon.

Life was precious to that man. He had always loved it. He was an able man and he had gotten what he wanted out of existence. He had used his powers. He had developed them. He was, as the world sees men, a success.

He had been a happy man, a vigorous man, a man well adjusted to his fellows and to life.

It was a sad wrench to be leaving this life so soon, while he was still strong, still able to enjoy what was his, and what was beautiful.

He hated to go. . . But he told no one how much he hated it.

Looking at him, hearing him laugh, you would have thought him a man of iron nerves, with no sensibility to him at all. . . But one day a friend came to visit this man condemned to die. He found him in the sunshine, in the heart of his family. They walked together on a green lawn, they talked casually of common things as men do in the presence of death. (I know about that because more than once in the war I talked to young men who did not know how soon or terribly they were about to die.)

And, this man took his visitor through the house and up the highest stairway. And they climbed a ladder and through a trapdoor into a little furnished room that was close under the eaves of the house. And the man shut the trapdoor and the two were alone in this little room.

The man said to his friend:

"This is my brooding room. This is where I come when I can't stand it any longer. When I want to be by myself—and can brood without anyone seeing me, without anyone knowing."

And the visitor who had seen into the heart of the condemned man went wistfully, sadly away. . . But good and what was beautiful.

He hated to go. . . But he told no one how much he hated it.

Looking at him, hearing him laugh, you would have thought him a man on duty in Hawaii for periods of limited duration, undoubtedly led to more than the average extra-marital relationships on the mainland cities, or marital relationships of temporary nature.

"Of these conditions we usually have thought of ourselves as the victims rather than the creators."

It evidently, however, is the danger of a development of race prejudice among the islanders which causes the delegate the gravest concern.

"Of late," he comments, "one even catches an occasional reference to 'natives' in discussions of the Hawaiian situation—an attitude which immediately raises the race issue."

As to the territory's native born Japanese, Delegate Houston agrees with former Governor Frear's account. "These folk," says the delegate, "are fully assimilated Americans, in sentiment and sympathy."

Budgets For The Entire Family

By MRS. MARY MORTON

Little Things To Remember

Record every little purchase, and do it as soon as possible after making it. Then you won't forget it.

When goods are charged they should be entered as expenditures for the month in which they are purchased. The items may be actually written down in the record day they are bought or when the itemized bill is received. But they should all be entered as of the month they are bought, regardless of when they are paid for. If only part of the bill is paid when received, the balance may be noted on a page and headed "Accounts Payable." Expenditures made by check should be entered just as if cash were paid.

Each member of the family should report to the one responsible for keeping the record all expenditures made from the general family money, or a notebook may be left in some convenient place and every day each member of the family write down in it his expenditures. The record keeper can then transfer these records once a week or often. It is a good plan to have a certain time to do this so that it becomes a part of the general routine and is kept up to date.

Expenditures made out of personal allowances should not be entered in the family record. These should be regarded as the private affairs of the individual, making them and recorded in his own book. In the case of children, of course, guidance will be needed.

How One Man Recovered

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

Whatever became of the victims of jake paralysis?

Their plight stirred up the country about a year ago. They were the ones who sampled some Jamaica ginger because other alcoholic stimulation was scarce. But unfortunately there was a large amount of Jamaica ginger on the market that had not been made from ginger. The manufacturer had used a chemical which tasted and smelled like ginger, but which was cheaper. The chemical was ti-ortho-cresyl phosphate. It had a specific effect on the nerves, causing degeneration.

The consequence was that even after using a very little of this ginger product the victim had a paralysis, particularly of the legs. The form of the paralysis was what is called "multiple neuritis." The victims had a steppage gait, so named because they lifted their feet very high when they walked, because otherwise the foot, being paralyzed, would hang down and trip them.

Most cases of multiple neuritis get well in the course of time. The nerves regenerate. But the report was that no case of jake paralysis made any improvement.

I was very glad, therefore, to find in my mail a letter from one of them, announcing that he had recovered and explaining the treatment he used in doing so. It is reproduced here for any who may be interested.

"I was one of the sufferers of so-called 'jakeleg,' or, as I prefer to call it, 'Zingabertitis,' and I am entirely free of the terrible disease, if it is one, reflexes normal, and no apparent deformity. I attribute my entire recovery to two things, namely, systematic daily prescribed exercise (holding to bed if necessary) rising up on the toes 15 times morning and night, and the mechanical act of putting the extensor muscles at rest for 12 hours by sleeping at night with the feet in the full extended position. I accomplished this by putting my feet flat on the foot of the bed; in iron beds a pillow may be used. The extensors are the muscles, as you know, affected, and it is surprising what this rest accomplishes as the tendency is to let the feet stay in the flexed state.

"I have four friends, who have come to me, cured almost as well as I with these simple rules plus an iron, quinine and strychnine tonic and proper diet. It is marvelous how quickly results begin and how different mentally they become."

QUESTIONS FROM READERS

R. D.: "I need help in controlling my appetite. I am very prone to over-eating and eating at the wrong times. I work in a chain grocery and its hours are long and sometimes irregular. I would like a list of books that give accurate and complete caloric values to foods."

Answer: Locke's "Food Values" published by Appleton, gives complete tables of foods. The difficulty about the tendency to over-eating is one that confronts all doctors who attempt to treat patients by diet. One can tell a patient what to do but there is no way of telling whether he is going to do it or not.

Editor's Note: Six pamphlets by Dr. Clendening can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed, stamped envelope, to Dr. Logan Clendening, in care of this paper, Central Press Association, 1435 East Twelfth Street, Cleveland, O.

The pamphlets are: "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reducing and Gaining," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

Girl Breaks Engagement

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

If two young people love each other enough to become engaged and contemplate marriage, shouldn't they have a great deal of faith in each other? And shouldn't they be big and broad-minded about things? If they are going to be suspicious and unbelieving during the engagement, they cannot expect much happiness and harmony after the wedding bells have pealed, can they?

"DEAR MISS LEE: I have been engaged to a boy two years older than myself for over a year, and a few weeks ago he took a girl to a dance and it was not until today that I found out about it. I have plenty of proof that he did take her to the dance, but when I asked him about it he denied it, so I don't know what to do.

"I gave him back his ring and he begged me to keep it, but if I can't trust him now I'll never be able to after we're married, I figure."

"Should I forgive him this time or let him stay away until he admits it, or accept dates from him now and then, or just what shall I do? If it were my fault that we broke the engagement I'd feel terrible, but as it is I don't feel so bad because I just despise deceitful people."

D. K. E.

How good is your "proof" that the boy friend took this girl to the dance, D. K. E.? Did you see him with your own eyes? Did your nearest friend see him—and not only see him, but talk to him so that he or she knew, without any shadow of doubt, that it was your fiancé?

If not I certainly think you should believe him when he says he did not take the girl. He is not a liar, is he, this young man to whom you have pledged your troth? That he has been in the habit of lying, has he?

People are easily mistaken in cases of identity. It's the easiest thing in the world to "think," and most to be sure, you saw a certain person somewhere, when as a matter of fact the person was not there at all. Suppose, as your boy friend denies that he took a girl to a dance, you give him the benefit of the doubt. You must have faith in the man you marry, as you surmise, and a suspicious person merely invites deceit.

But suppose you find out that he really did take her, what then, you ask? That depends on how much you love this young man. If you care very much for him, won't you encourage him to tell you about his activities and be broadminded about his actions? It might very well be that circumstances forced him to escort a girl to a party, and if he had been sure you would have taken it all right, he would have told you about it.

After all is said and done, you see, my dear, you have to decide this matter for yourself.

BASHFUL BABE: Talk about the same things you would if you were with a girl-school affair, sports, shows, etc.

ANXIOUS JANET: Ask your father to bring him to the house some time, Janet. If you can't do that, the only thing you can do is to be as friendly as possible when you see him. The rest is up to him.

Now I dug that hole fer you an' that's all that kin be done.

Here is a recent photo of General P. J. Blucher, who has been promoted Commander-in-Chief of the Soviet special Far Eastern army. This important post brings all the military forces of the Soviet States in the Far East under his command and makes him responsible for the protection of Soviet interests along the Chinese border.

A decision either way is expected to come hard with the Tokyo leaders. In the meantime, officials here expected considerable jockeying and feinting by both Japanese and Chinese forces in Shanghai, with sporadic outbursts of firing between the two.

They had much to discuss. Mar- cia offered suggestions which she had held in reserve until this meeting. In the same manner that she had developed the cosmetics department at Pappe's in Mitchellfield, she was eager to improve her present working methods as ideas occurred to her. DuMott was delighted, enthusiastic.

Finally, he sent for his car, and drove with her to her first location. Within an hour, she had shipped into the same familiar routine, with Connie Deitz for her assistant. Connie was a frail little thing—rather pretty, but apparently lacking in whatever vitamins promote color and zest. Her pale gold hair formed an aureole of ringlets around her wistful, pale face, and her large gray eyes held a haunting expression, it seemed to Marcia, who glowed with health and color and youthful verve, particularly on this day of days.

Connie, it developed, had seen better days in her early youth. She was a product of culture and the victim of suddenly renounced fortune. Her mother now kept a lodging house in the West Forties, and since the recent uncertainty of that income, Connie had become a department store cash girl. Mrs. Deitz had objected, but Connie was firm about doing something to earn some money, she had discovered that her culture had little cash value, and that her total lack of practical experience would have been worthless, had not one of her mother's lodgers been so obliging as to arrange for a position with his establishment.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

The second semester of the school year commenced Monday. We find the junior class fairly busy. Last Wednesday they gave a picture show featuring Rin-Tin-Tin in "The Lighthouse by the Sea." Last Friday night they held a dance in the gym. Regardless of the weather many turned out and enjoyed themselves dancing to the rhythm of Lew Romo's Orchestra. The orchestra gave a few specialties. Chaperons for the dance besides the class advisor, Miss Marjorie Orr, were Mr. and Mrs. H. Glenn Patterson and Mr. and Mrs. Russell M. Kennedy.

A contest has been started for the fourth to twelfth grades. Prizes for the contest were given by the American Legion. This contest is to write an essay on George Washington since this is the bicentennial celebration of the birth of "The Father of the Country." The contest closes February 17, and the winner from each class will read the prize essay before the Legion. A show was given Monday, on George Washington's life to help the pupils in their essays. It was shown at Central, McKinley and Spring Hill Schools for the fourth to the twelfth grades. It was a very helpful show because it showed Washington in the midst of battle, how he built the nation and how he united the colonies. It was a show everybody enjoyed and no one lost interest in it.

Elsie Janis Quits Stage To Devote Time To Radio

By MILDRED MASON

ELSIE JANIS has retired from stage and screen to devote all her time to radio. She is now appearing regularly on a program over an NBC-WJZ network every Wednesday and Friday night at 7:45 o'clock. This program is not available through a Cincinnati station, however. Miss Janis is replacing Robert L. "Believe-it-or-not" Ripley who is enjoying a cruise around the world.

On her programs Miss Janis sings, gives her famous impersonations of celebrities and typical characters, tells stories and indulges in humorous dialogue with her accompanist, Jack King. King is also heard in duets with Miss Janis. It is because she feels that radio offers the best opportunity to make a contribution of song and cheer to those who need it most that she has determined to devote her future personal services exclusively to radio, Miss Janis explains.

To Honor Journalist.

Commemorating the anniversary of the birthday of Horace Greeley, journalist and statesman, B. G. Parker, editor-in-chief of Scripps-Howard newspapers, will deliver an address on Greeley over an NBC network Wednesday at 4:15 p. m. A program of music as a tribute to Greeley will go on the air over an NBC network at 4 p. m. It has not been announced through which stations the program may be heard.

Singer to Present Series.

Kate Smith will initiate a series of Monday and Wednesday features known as "Star Memories" in her broadcast Wednesday over the Columbia network through WKRC, Cincinnati, at 8:30 p. m. In these "Star Memories" Kate will recall stage, screen and radio performers of the past and present and the principal song with which they are identified. On her opening program she will sing "Throw Him Down McClosky" which Maggie Cline, an outstanding star of several decades ago, featured with great success.

To Interview Golfer.

Bobby Jones, retired amateur golf champion, will discuss the various angles of the game when interviewed by Grantland Rice in a program over an NBC network Wednesday evening. The program will be heard through station WSAI, Cincinnati, at 10 o'clock.

Here and There

Marian Harris, popular NBC blues singer, has four pets which form a small League of Nations. They are: Pal, a German police dog; Sally, a French bull; Miss Sue, a tiny Pekinese and Satan, just an ordinary black cat. Jane Froman, NBC's youthful crooner from the Mississippi regions is superstitious. She won't walk under a ladder. . . . All the problems the NBC Sisters of the Skillet receive are not on paper. Recently a studio visitor brought them a broken electric iron and asked them to repair it. . . . Harry Horlick, leader of the Gypsies Dance Orchestra heard over an NBC network, originally played in a Park Avenue restaurant.

Lipstick Girl A Romance of a Little Beauty

By EDNA ROBB WEBSTER

Author of "DAD'S GIRL," "JORETTA" and "LOVE PREFERRED"

CHAPTER 38

FROM her hotel window, Marcia could look over the tops of several blocks of buildings, and almost around the corner of one that towered above her, she saw a huge clock in the distance. She was still located on the upper floors of hotels in lowest rate singles. But the fact did not trouble her on the first morning in New York. For several minutes, she just stood and stared at the little of the city that was visible from her window. Across the street and several floors below her, she could see girls and men moving about and sitting at desks and telephoning. It struck her as odd that people in New York looked and acted just like people everywhere. That the place across the street appeared to be just like any other office, with the people moving listlessly about and acting like ordinary human beings. Well, what did she expect? She didn't quite know. The great clock in the distance was more inspiring. Had she known that it located famous Times Square at Broadway and Seventh Avenue, she would have been even more inspired. But she didn't know. That it looked New Yorkish, was enough at the moment.

A double, punctuated by shrill traffic whistles floated up to her on the crisp autumn air, and prompted her to action. She wanted to get out of this tiny room that was just like any other hotel room she had occupied—except that it was smaller for the price—and become a part of the morning throngs. She wondered if she might see in New York as any other place, but to Marcia's bewildered mind at that moment, east might well be west. The attendant was very obliging. Marcia should turn to the right. Very well. She was quite sure she had not forgotten which was her right hand, Marcia thought whimsically.

When she went downstairs, Marcia inquired timidly at the information desk the direction she would take to Fifth Avenue. She was told to go west, and had to insist upon learning if she should make a left or right turn from the hotel entrance. East might be east and west west, in New York as in any other place, but to Marcia's bewildered mind at that moment, east might well be west. The attendant was very obliging. Marcia should turn to the right. Very well. She was quite sure she had not forgotten which was her right hand, Marcia thought whimsically.

She would have recognized the avenue when she reached it, principally by the funny green double-deck busses that could be seen in both directions, even had the corner signposts not proclaimed it to her. It was a glorious, stimulating sight. Everything looked so clean and new and progressive. The people seemed to walk with more buoyant steps, and as if they had a pleasant destination and were in a hurry to arrive. The traffic flowed swiftly along, the shop windows glittered and invited, and the sun had just climbed above the towers of stone and flooded it all with a golden brilliance. A little distance down the avenue, the Empire State Building loomed above all its surroundings like a giant among men, and held Marcia's awed inspection for a moment. Perhaps in all her life, Marcia never would experience again the utter joyousness of that moment, for nothing ever would so impress her unrestrained fancy.

But whatever might happen, Marcia did not wish to appear "small townish," so she stepped into the march of humanity and walked along hurriedly as if she, too, had a pleasant destination. She walked for several blocks, crossed the avenue at the traffic signal and walked back already, she seemed to have found her bearings. She had noted that the streets crossing the avenue were numbered consecutively, and that the avenue divided their destination of east or west. And she began to comprehend the great city.

As Marcia had noticed upon her arrival, taxicabs were very much in evidence, and formed the majority of the traffic. She signaled one, and gave the office address. She was surprised to discover that it was not far away; and almost before she knew it, she whizzed upward to the forty-ninth floor of a building.

It seemed that DuMott was expecting her, and had so informed the reception room telephone operator. His word, she saw her at once.

In spite of the fact that Marcia knew Percy DuMott personally, had talked with him and dined with him in her own home town, and had been in his employ and months, she experienced a weak-kneed sensation when she was ushered into the private suite of offices of the president. This place seemed to be removed in time and place by six months ago. The reception room attendant had turned her over to an office boy, and he now relinquished her to a poised, attractive girl in a very smart frock who inspected Marcia critically before she said, "Will you come this way, Miss Moyer?"

Marcia followed her into another spacious room, that was a medley of black and silver modernistic angles, which she had not time to separate into definite objects before Percy DuMott had hurried forward and taken her hand in sanguine greeting.

"At last, you are here!" he exclaimed. "As lovely as ever—yes, more lovely," he declared, his bright, quick eyes inspecting her swiftly. Crossing the room, still holding her hand, as if she were an old friend, he indicated a deep armchair an angular lines and soft velvet that was the color of pussy willows. "Sit here by the window and let me look at you. There! Did you enjoy the trip down?"

Lipstick Girl A Romance of a Little Beauty

By EDNA ROBB WEBSTER

Author of "DAD'S GIRL," "JORETTA" and "LOVE PREFERRED"

CHAPTER 38

FROM her hotel window, Marcia could look over the tops of several blocks of buildings, and almost around the corner of one that towered above them and saw a huge clock in the distance. She was still located on the upper floors of hotels in lowest rate singles. But the fact did not trouble her on the first morning in New York. For several minutes, she just stood and stared at the little of the city that was visible from her window. Across the street and several floors below her, she could see girls and men moving about and sitting at desks and telephoning. It struck her as odd that people in New York looked and acted just like people everywhere. That the place across the street appeared to be just like any other office, with the people moving listlessly about and acting like ordinary human beings. Well, what did she expect? She didn't quite know. The great clock in the distance was more inspiring. Had she known that it located famous Times Square at Broadway and Seventh Avenue, she would have been even more inspired. But she didn't know. That it looked New Yorkish, was enough at the moment.

A dim rumble, punctuated by shrill traffic whistles floated up to her on the crisp autumn air, and prompted her to action. She wanted to get out of this tiny room that was just like any other hotel room she had occupied—except that it was smaller for the price, and become a part of the morning throngs. She wondered if she might get lost if she walked around a little before she went to the DuMott offices. It seemed to her that the city was too big to comprehend in the terms of directions and relative locations. She knew that Park Avenue was somewhere, and Broadway in another place and Central Park had its fixed location but their respective locations to each other were very obscure and might never become adjusted for her.

When she went downstairs, Marcia inquired timidly at the information desk the direction she would take to Fifth Avenue. She was told to go west, and had to insist upon learning if she should make a left or right turn from the hotel entrance. East might be east and west west in New York as in any other place; but to Marcia's bewildered mind at that moment, east might well be west. The attendant was very obliging. Marcia should turn to the right. Very well. She was quite sure she had not forgotten which was her right hand, Marcia thought whimsically.

She would have recognized the avenue when she reached it, principally by the funny green double-deck busses that could be seen in both directions, even as the corner signposts did not proclaimed it to her. It was a glorious, stimulating sight. Everything looked so clean and new and progressive. The people seemed to walk with more buoyant steps, and as if they had a pleasant destination and were in a hurry to arrive. The traffic flowed swiftly along, the shop windows glittered and invited, and the sun had just climbed above the towers of stone and flooded it all with a golden brilliance. A little distance down the avenue, the Empire State Building loomed above all its surroundings like a giant among men, and held Marcia's awed inspection for a moment. Perhaps in all her life, Marcia would experience again the utter joyousness of that moment, for nothing ever would so impress her unrestrained fancy.

But whatever might happen, Marcia did not wish to appear "small townish," so she stepped into the march of humanity and walked along hurriedly as if she, too, had a pleasant destination. She crossed several blocks, crossed the avenue at the traffic signal and walked back. Already, she seemed to have found her bearings. She had noted that the streets crossing the avenue were numbered consecutively, and that the avenue divided their destination of east or west. And she began to comprehend the great city.

As Marcia had noticed upon her arrival, taxicabs were very much in evidence, and formed the majority of the traffic. She signaled one, and gave the office address. She was surprised to discover that it was not far away; and almost before she knew it, she whizzed upward to the forty-ninth floor of a building.

It seemed that DuMott was expecting her, and had so informed the reception room telephone operator. He would see her at once.

In spite of the fact that Marcia knew Percy DuMott personally, had talked with him and dined and had been in his employ and months, she experienced a weak-kneed sensation when she was ushered into the private suit of offices of the president. This place seemed to be removed in time and place by worlds, from Mitchellfield, and six months ago. The reception room attendant had turned her over to an office boy, and he now reined quashed her to a poised, attractive girl in a very smart frock who inspected Marcia critically before she said, "Will you come this way, Miss Moyer?"

Marcia followed her into another spacious room that was a medley of black and silver modernistic angles, which she had not time to separate into definite objects before Percy DuMott had hurried forward and taken her hand in sanguine greeting.

"At last, you are here!" he exclaimed. "As lovely as ever—yes, more lovely," he declared, his bright, quick eyes inspecting her swiftly. Crossing the room, still holding her hand, as if she were an old friend, he indicated a deep armchair an angular lines and soft velvet that was the color of pussy willows. "Sit here by the window and let me look at you. There! Did you enjoy the trip down?"

"Very much, and I have enjoyed every minute since I arrived. New York is wonderful!"

"Fine! I hope you will continue to enjoy it. Your work has proved more satisfactory than I had hoped, and in spite of the worst business year we have known. It was a stroke of good fortune that prompted me to look you up."

"Oh! you could as easily have found a girl here in New York to do this work," Marcia objected.

"Positively not! The combination of a girl of your beauty and personality, plus a thorough knowledge of our products, plus your sales experience can be duplicated nowhere that I know. That is settled. Now, about your work here. Should you like to remain here for a couple of months?"

Marcia's face glowed. "I'd love it!"

He smiled and nodded. "We could keep you here indefinitely, of course, but that would not increase sales in other cities, and spread the good news of beauty for women for the taking."

They had much to discuss. Marcia offered suggestions which she had held in reserve until this meeting. In the same manner that she had developed the cosmetics department at Pappes in Mitchellfield, she was eager to improve her present working methods as ideas occurred to her. DuMott was delighted, enthusiastic.

Finally, he sent for his car, and drove with her to her first location. Within an hour, she had slipped into the same familiar routine, with Connie Deitz for her assistant. Connie was a frail little thing—rather pretty, but apparently lacking in whatever vitamins promote color and zest. Her pale gold hair formed an aureole of ringlets around her wistful, pale face, and her large gray eyes held a haunting expression, it seemed to Marcia, who dealt with health and color and youthful verve, particularly on this day of days.

Connie, it developed, had seen better days in her early youth. She was a product of culture and the victim of suddenly renewed fortune. Her mother now kept a lodging house in the West Forties, and since the recent uncertainty of that income Connie had become a department store cash girl. Mrs. Deitz had objected, but Connie had been firm about doing something to earn some money, she had discovered that her culture had little cash value, and that her total lack of practical experience would have been worthless, had not one of her mother's lodgers been so obliging as to arrange for a position with the store.

TWO VETERAN PENNSY EMPLOYEES ARE PLACED ON HONOR ROLL HERE ON MONDAY

TWO employees of the Pennsylvania Railroad—one with a record of fifty years of service and the other with more than forty years of service, were retired, effective February 1. They are John W. Gardner Sr., 824 N. Detroit St., who has been employed in the telegraph department, and Robert W. L. Terrell, 217 Hill St., an employee of the carpentry department.

Mr. Gardner began service on the railroad in 1882 but previous to that had learned the trade as an extra employee in the telegraph office of the railroad at Clarksville. He entered the employ of the railroad as a telegraph operator in 1882 at Sabina. He worked there several years and was then transferred to Junction City and then to Wilmington. He came to Xenia in 1891 and has been employed here since.

Mr. Gardner has no immediate plans for the future but plans to "take it easy" since his retirement and expects to spend considerable time working in his garden, which is his hobby.

Mr. Terrell entered the employ of the railroad at Xenia in 1886 as a fence foreman in the carpentry department. He has been employed here continuously during that time with the exception of a short time about 1905 when he obtained a leave of absence. During the summer months he was employed in the fence department and in the winter months in the bridge department as a carpenter. Mr. Terrell was placed on the relief list of the railroad two years ago when ill health forced him to give up active employment. Mr. Terrell is a member of Xenia Lodge No. 49, F. & A. M., of which Mr. Gardner is a past master. Mr. Gardner has been active in the Masonic Lodge here and has held offices in all of the Masonic bodies.

Company officers will be Captain Harold L. Hays, superintendent of the O. S. and S. O. Home as commander and First Lieutenant F. R. Woodruff, which means the appointment of a second lieutenant will be necessary. The appointment will probably be made from the ranks since several men with reserve officers' commissions enlisted as privates in the company.

John G. Baldwin is a former air corps officer, Clarence E. Bay is a reserve infantry officer, Ralph E. Gordon, is a reserve first lieutenant from the regular army and Sergeant Hildebrecht has a reserve commission from the R. O. T. C. of Ohio State University. Bernard McKinley is a former battalion major from the O. S. and S. O. Home, highest ranking cadet officer. Glendon Lakes is a cadet captain and George F. Gates a cadet lieutenant at the Home now.

A number of the recruits are Central High School students. The club feature of enlistment has been stressed by announcement that the army will be kept open for club members and recreational facilities at the Home now.

The Shanghai incident may cost Japan all the victories won by her armies in Manchuria, and more. It already has cost her most of what international good will and trust remained to her as a result of her army's activities in Manchuria. Even France, which here before had looked with passive eyes upon Japanese military activities, has now been moved to join the British-American protest concerning Shanghai.

Military experts believe Japan is now faced with two alternatives, she must either send to China sufficient force of regular army units to occupy China from Shanghai to Nanking, and possibly up the Yangtze River another 400 miles, or she must evacuate her marines from Shanghai. Either move will be costly.

A campaign of sufficient breadth successfully to occupy and pacify the Yangtze Valley would, in the opinion of military experts, require a force of 250,000 or more men and several months of operation. It is not believed the Japanese exchequer could stand the drain.

To evacuate the forces now in Shanghai would be to admit defeat and "lose face." It would add tremendously to Chinese self-esteem and would almost certainly hasten a concerted effort by the Chinese to dislodge the Japanese.

A decision either way is expected to come hard with the Tokyo leaders. In the meantime, officials here expected considerable jockeying and feinting by both Japanese and Chinese forces in Shanghai, with sporadic outbursts of firing between the two.

MORROW APPEAL FOR NEW TRIAL WILL BE ARGUED THURSDAY

Arguments in support of a new trial for Ralph Morrow, 38, owner of the Osborn Hotel, convicted of grand larceny by a jury in Common Pleas Court last week, will be heard by Judge R. L. Gowdy Thursday morning.

The chief reason advanced by Attorney F. L. Johnson, defense counsel, in the request for a new trial for Morrow is that Douglas Osborn, farm hand, one of the state's principal witnesses, gave false testimony.

The alleged false evidence referred to was that Morrow stood guard over Osborn with a gun in the residence of Charles Monnett, south of Yellow Springs, which the Osborn hotel proprietor and five other men are charged with having robbed of property valued at $619.50 last November 20, and that he took a watch and chain from the farm hand.

Had it not been for the fact that Clayton Grissom, 21, Osborn, one of the accused men, refused to testify at the trial on the ground that it might incriminate him, Attorney Johnson said that he could have proved by Grissom's testimony, and also by Samuel Johnson, another suspect, that Osborn's allegations were incorrect.

Morrow's attorney accompanied the trial motion by his own affidavit that he was unable to establish his client's innocence because of the refusal of Grissom and Johnson to testify.

Judge Gowdy announced that he had assigned the trial of A. B. Malotte, Osborn filling station and restaurant owner, also indicted for the Monnett robbery, for February 17.
